BUSINESS SUMMARY

Eastman Kodak Company provides imaging technology products and services to the photographic and graphic communications markets worldwide. It operates in three business segments: Consumer Digital Imaging Group (CDG); Film, Photofinishing, and Entertainment Group (FPEG); and Graphic Communications Group (GCG). The CDG segment offers consumer digital products that include digital still and video cameras, digital picture frames, imaging accessory products, and snapshot printers and printer media; retail kiosks and consumables, consumer and retailer software workflows, remote business monitoring, retail store merchandising and identity programs, and after sale service and support; imaging sensors; and all-in-one inkjet printers. This segment also provides online merchandise and sharing services. The FPEG segment comprises traditional photographic products and services used for consumer, professional, and industrial imaging applications, as well as those products and services used in the creation of motion pictures. It manufactures and markets films (motion picture, consumer, professional, industrial, and aerial), and one-time-use cameras. The GCG segment digital and traditional prepress equipment and consumables, including plates, chemistry, and media; workflow software and digital controller development; color, and black and white electrophotographic equipment and consumables; commercial inkjet printing systems; wide-format inkjet inks and media; production and workgroup document scanners; and micrographic peripherals and media. It also provides imaging services; and maintenance and professional services for other manufacturers' products. This segment serves various customers in the creative, in-plant, data center, commercial printing, packaging, newspaper, and digital service bureau market segments. Eastman Kodak Company has collaboration with Pitney Bowes for imaging and workflow solutions. The company was founded in 1880 and is headquartered in Rochester, New York.
